Commentary and outlook by Mercer Australia

Market Commentary

Equities were mixed over the quarter, with emerging markets and global equities advancing, while Australian equities declined.

Mega caps continued to deliver strong performance on favourable earnings and persistent AI-optimism, while rate-sensitive smaller companies lagged as expectations towards the scale and timing of policy easing were pushed out, stemming from stubborn 'last mile' inflation.

Regional performance was mixed as US markets advanced on a combination of strong corporate earnings, AI-optimism and improving macroeconomic outlook, while political instability in Europe weighed on the region's equities. Both France and the UK called snap elections during the quarter. Global Equities: Growth outperforms Value in the second quarter. The Information Technology and Communication Services sectors delivered the strongest performance over the period. Returns outside these sectors was generally negative, with Utilities proving the only other sector to deliver positive absolute returns. Emerging markets outperformed developed peers as Taiwan and India delivered strong returns. In Taiwan, AI-exposed companies benefited from sustained optimism towards the technology. While in India, expectations of policy continuity from the re-election of the BJP government, prolonged the rally in the country's equities.

While growth in the Australian economy remains weak, with consumption particularly soft, the disinflationary process appears to have paused at an uncomfortably high level for the RBA, delaying the likely start of a monetary easing cycle. GDP growth in the first quarter of 2024 was weak again, with the economy expanding just 0.1% Quarter-on-Quarter and 1.1% Year-on-Year. While the labour market remains tight, leading indicators are showing signs of easing. Job vacancies have eased substantially from their peak but remain above pre-Covid levels.

Employment growth has remained broadly steady over the past three months compared to the prior three months, although hours worked have dipped and the underutilisation rate has picked up, implying that unemployment has bottomed and confirming wage growth peaked.

Mercer International Shares Fund Commentary

The Mercer International Shares Fund underperformed the MSCI World ex Aus Index over the quarter and remains modestly below index out to 5 years. Over the quarter, underlying manager performance was mixed. Baillie Gifford led performance having benefitted from its larger exposure to growth and AI-exposed names. On the other side, Wellington lagged the most due to its large underweight to the US and nil exposure to mega cap securities.

At the aggregate Fund level, the underweight and stock selection in Canada was the top contributor to relative outcomes. Conversely stock selection in the US was the top detractor. From a sector perspective, stock selection in Energy contributed most positively, whereas the underweight and stock selection in IT detracted the most. At the stock level, the underweight to Toyota Motor Corp was the top contributor to relative performance. The company's share price moved lower amid continued fallout from a safety certification scandal. On the other side, the underweight to Apple was the top detractor due to strong performance off the back of its announced collaboration with OpenAI to offer artificial intelligence to users of new iPhones.

Market Outlook

We expect core measures of inflation to moderate albeit at slower pace than other developed economies, with pressures such as from the residential rental markets expected to continue in the near term. Whilst the RBA has indicated that it will be vigilant against upside inflation risks, we believe that risks of a slowdown in activity are more likely than currently anticipated by markets.
